

Henry's Wives.

Being known for his lack of generosity and short temper, it is unambiguous that Henry VIII had a fickle married life, consisting of multiple ladies - six to be exact.

- Catherine of Aragon (1509-1533)
- Anne Boleyn (1533-1536)
- Jane Seymour (1536-1537)
- Anne of Cleves (Jan 1540 - Jul 1540)
- Kathryn Howard (1540-1542)
- Catherine Parr (1543-1547)

It can be agreed that all of his wives had an impact on Henry, but Anne Boleyn had the biggest affect. Anne Boleyn - who had six fingers - is the one who supported Henry when he wanted to start the Church of England when he wanted to divorce Catherine of Aragon, but the pope refused. Additionally, Anne Boleyn was the one who gave birth to Queen Elizabeth I, a significant character in history. Therefore, Anne Boleyn can be argued to have the biggest impact on Henry because of all this, despite her being beheaded against her will, due to her unable to produce a son.
