

Dear Mum,

Being in Mexico for three weeks has been much harder than expected and is much hotter than home. You are probably wondering why I am writing this letter - well, you might not be having fun back there, so I am writing to tell you about the things I have experienced and will experience. Hopefully, you will enjoy the letter and not cry because I'm having fun without you. One more thing - I have so many adventures to tell you about. Unfortunately, I cannot fit them all on one mere post.

To begin with, here are some facts so you can know about Mexico.

Located in North America, Mexico is surrounded by the Caribbean sea and the Gulf of Mexico and is NW (North West) of South America. Mexico connects two continents, as it is in Central America. Since it is close to the equator, it obviously would be much hotter than the temperature of the dull, cobbled streets back in London.

I have proudly visited various human features - and one of my favourites has to be El Tajin, located in Veracruz, a city in Mexico. El Tajin holds unique architecture unlike home, and the best thing about it is the altitude of the pyramid reaching up to the sky - the Pyramid of Niches. The bricks and materials are well designed, and my life has become much better since I've met it.

I have also been to various physical features here in Mexico, and one of my favourites would be, of course Copper Canyon, located on the Chihuahua al Pacifico, and surprisingly several times larger than the Grand Canyon! It is surrounded by gigantic cliffs and has a beautiful lake in the middle of it!

I might meet other landmarks like Cozumel or Chichen Itza, but will they beat my two favourites?

Sincerely, Muhammad.
