

Dear Rumer,

Thank you for your postcard, it sounds like you've been having a great time back home in Manchester. I don't even know how to use one word to describe the remarkable trip so far; it is impossible to mention on a postcard. As you may have expected, the climate is amazing and sunny, due to it being located near the equator. However, there is quite a bit of rain, and the storms can be horrendous.

With the Pacific Ocean to the west and the Caribbean Sea to the east, there is a lot of coastlines - North America is fantastic. Before my time is over, I hope to visit Guatemala - one of the countries that border Mexico. During my time here, I have explored a vast amount of the area, with deserts in the north and luxurious coastlines in the south.

Located in the south east, I plan to visit Isla Mujeres because I would like to go scuba diving in the bright blue sea. In my head, I expected it to be remarkable, just because it is eight miles away from Cancun. Beaches back in Manchester are pebbly and rocky, but here they actually have sand.

I plan to visit Cathedral Metropolitana - which is located in the south - because of how interesting it looks.

There must also be a lot of expensive art. In the UK, they don't have two towers, but the Cathedral also has turrets.

I can't wait to see you in six days, when I will be able to show you pictures.

Lara,
